ا. mīm. The 24th letter of the Arabic, and 27th of the Persian and Turkish alphabets. Its phonetic value is m. It has the numerical value of 40 in chronograms and astronomical tables.

In the dates of letters it is the abbreviation for مَهْر mahr, the first month of the Arabian year. In philological and similar works, it is the abbreviation of the word معلوم (well known). At the end of a writing or book it stands for the word م (it has become complete), in the sense of finis.

As the abbreviation of the word يوم (day), it is used in calendars to represent Saturday. It is one of the symbolical letters inscribed at the commencement of chapters of the Qur'an.

In Arabic grammar and derivation, the letter م fills several very important functions as a servile initial to derivative words. In the first place, it is the initial letter, in words deriving from the primitive trilateral chapter, of the passive participle (اسم مفعول nomen patientis), a servile long vowel, being then inserted between the second and third radicals; as: فعل fā'ala (he did), مفعول mōf'āl (done); قتل qātala (he killed), مقتول mūqtāl (killed).

In the second place م is the initial of the primitive derivative named the noun of time and place (اسم زمان اسم مكان), and also the noun of receptacle (اسم ظرف); as, مكتب mōktāb (a place for writing, a school), موضع mōwz' (a place of putting, of situation, a site). These forms are sometimes verbal nouns (مصدر مبی); as, قتل (a killing); and sometimes nouns of the place of abundance (اسم کثرت); as, مائدة (a place of lions).

It is also the initial of a class of derivatives, which designate the instrument of action (اسم آلت); as, مفتاح miftāḥ (r. فتح) an opening tool, a key, مقراض mīqrāz (r. قرض) a clipping tool, a scissors. These forms are sometimes nouns of the vessel (اسم وعاء); as, مبول mībvol (r. بول) a urinal, حلب mīhlīb (r. حلب) a milking-pail, etc.

In the derived chapters, the م is the initial of every active participle (اسم فاعل) and passive participle (اسم مفعول) the only difference in each pair being that the active participle has ḥāḥ as the vowel of its second radical, whereas the passive participle has ustūn.

The form of the passive participle (rarely) becomes also a verbal noun, or a noun of time and place. It is also the initial letter of the first verbal noun of the third chapter of derivation, being then movent with ūtūrū.

In Persian Ottoman words the only grammatical use of م is as a final servile preceded by ūtūrū, to form the ordinal numbers; as, یکم yēkyūm (first), دوم duyūm (second), etc.

In Ottoman grammar, the letter م has many important uses. Movent with ustūn, it forms, as a servile termination, the root of the negative verb; as, کیماک gīmāmōk (not to wear); کتنامک gīynmāmēk (not to put on); سوشمامک sūwōylāshmāmēk (not to converse together); etc.

Followed by ق or ک it forms the servile termination of the infinitive of every Turkish verb.

As a servile final preceded by ḥāḥ (except in the optative and conditional), it forms the first person singular of every tense of the verb; as, yazıyor yāziyōrīm (I am writing); yazıyordum yāziyōrdım (I was writing); etc.

As a servile final preceded by a vowel and added to a primitive verbal root, it forms a noun of action, and also a noun of quantity performed by one action; as, آتیم ātīm (an act of throwing; a quantity thrown at once; a distance to which one act throws).

Joined as a servile final to a noun, substantive or adjective, it is the verb substantive I am; as, آدم ādāmım (I am a man).

With substantives ending in consonants, it is the possessive pronoun of the first person singular; as, آدم ādāmım (my man), اوğul oğulüm (my son). But if the substantive end in a vowel, the possessive pronoun becomes a final to the last syllable of the substantive itself; as, باب bābım (my father).

A very peculiar trivial use of the letter م in conversational Ottoman Turkish, to express a collection or a distinction of various things, while naming only one of them, is by repeating the name of that thing with its initial letter changed into م; as اساس asāsı giving the meaning of "and such things".

ن

A. ن nūn. The twenty-eighth letter of the Turkish and Persian alphabets, twenty-fifth of the Arabic. Its phonetic value is N. In chronograms it has the value of 50. In dates of documents it represents the month of Ramazan.

ن is of the "solar" class, so that the ج of the Arabic article is changed in pronunciation to ن when prefixed to a word which commences with this letter.

In Arabic grammar this letter fulfils several functions. Firstly, it is the distinctive factor, as a servile, in forming the seventh chapter of triliteral derivation, called انفعال بابي; it is prefixed, quiescently, to the radicals, while a servile ا is inserted between the second and third radicals to form the verbal noun, and a hemze of junction "همزة الوصل" precedes the ن; as, from نحن we get انحرام. Secondly, ن precedes the other letters of the word in the first person plural of the aorist tense of the Arabic verb; thus: نعلم nā'lam. we know, لا نسلم lā nūsallim. we surrender not, etc. Thirdly, movent with ustun, it ends the third person plural feminine of the arabic preterite; as: قلن qūlnū. they said. These forms are only met with in quotations.

In Turkish words the letter ن movent with esere and followed by ك, forms the genitive of nouns ending with a vowel; as: بابك bābānīn. of a or the father, etc. In the declension of the suffixed possessive pronoun of the third person, singular and plural, in all cases but the nominative, the letter ن appears to represent the possessive suffix, thus: ساقال sāqālī. his beard, ساقالین sāqālīnīn. of his beard, etc. Preceded by a servile vowel ي, and causing the final ق or ك of the infinitive to change into غ or softened ك, the ن forms and terminates the sixth gerund; as: باقن bāqnmāghīn. etc. In the derivation of Turkish verbs, the ن forms the root-word of the indeterminate conjugations, active and passive; as, باقى bāqnmāq. باقىق bāqīnmāq. When the primitive root-word of a Turkish congeries of verbs ends with ج, the root-word of the primitive passive is formed with ن in lieu of the normal ج; thus: اولقى olūnmāq. اولتىق olūnmāq; بولقى būlmāq. بولتىق būlūnmāq. etc. The same substitution of ن for ج takes place in the passive when the primitive root-word ends in a vowel, but then ج may be added after the ن; thus: ارامقى ārānmāq. ارانقى ārānīlmāq.

و wāw, wōw, wō. The twenty-ninth letter of the Turkish and Persian alphabets, twenty sixth of the Arabic. Its phonetic value, as a consonant, is usually that of V, sometimes that of W; sometimes it has a peculiar sound of its own, that begins as a V and then becomes converted into a W.

But this letter is also a vowel, always long in Arabic and Persian words, with the value of ā. In Turkish and foreign words the vowel is generally, if not always, short, and may have the value of ō, ū, ū, ū. This last value is given to it even in the Persian word کور kūr, become vernacular in Turkish.

It represents the numeral 6 in chronograms and mathematical formulæ.

When, in an Arabic word, a consonantal hemze is movent with an uturu vowel, it is written as a و with the hemze sign over it; as, و. The long vowel و following such hemze is frequently omitted; as, و. If final in a word, after a quiescent consonant, the hemze alone is sometimes figured; as, و. and this final hemze is generally suppressed when such words pass into Turkish; as, و.

و (for و), etc. But, if the preceding consonant be movent with uturu, the final و is retained; as, و.

The same change takes place when the consonant preceding the hemze is movent with uturu; as, و. unless such preceding consonant be followed by a long vowel و; when the hemze takes its own form; as, و.

و. conj. 1. And, also, too. 2. Or. 3. But. 4. (in an oath) By. (In Persian construction of pairs of words, this conjunction, with the use of and, or or, is generally pronounced و or و. (And then, "Good bye"!)) The question is at an end, all is said. 1. By God! 2. For God's sake!

و. (for و; in compounds), s. Cooked food; و. Wheat pottage.

و. (as an initial to a compound) a. & adv. 1. Open. 2. Back. 3. Again. 4. Away. و. Who has stood back, aside. و. Cut off, cut away. و. (pl. و.) Bound back, attached, dependent; pl., dependents, connexions, followers. و. An asking again in reply. و. Back; again. و. The very last. و. Entirely separated, apart.

و. interj. Oh! Alas! and A-lack-a-day!

A. h, vulg. h The thirtieth letter of the Turkish and Persian, and twenty seventh of the Arabic alphabet. Its phonetic value, as a consonant, is that of h, being the soft aspirate, as ح is the hard. Care must always be taken to sound this aspirate, but there are no words of Turkish origin that end with an aspirate.

As a vowel, h has the phonetic value of o or â. As a final vowel in an Arabic word, it always replaces a letter h, the sign of the feminine or of unity.

The medial vowel h is never joined to the following consonant; as: باقدجق. But the aspirate consonantal h is joined to syllables which may be suffixed; as: راهر rahler, شاهك shâh-nîh, بادشاهرى pâdishâhlerî.

The letter h has the numeric value of 5 in chronograms and in astronomical formulæ.

In Arabic grammar the only uses of the letter h, representing a final h, is to form the feminine and the noun of unity. At the end of Persian words, (1) it gives a substantive a secondary or special meaning; as: دندان dendân, (2) it forms adjectives of periods of time; as: روز rûz, سال sâl. In Turkish verbs it forms the optative and the fifth gerund; as: باقه.

T. h, prep. 1. To. 2. Towards. (When the word to which this preposition is suffixed ends with a vowel o, u, or y, the preposition becomes ya, yâ; as: بابه bâbâya).

ا. ی yā, vulg. yō. The thirty first letter of the Turkish and Persian alphabets and twenty eighth of the Arabic. Its phonetic value as a consonant is that of the English y. As a vowel its phonetic value is i, ī, or i or, as a final in some Arabic words, ū.

An initial ی is always a consonant; a medial ی may be a consonant or a vowel. In Arabic and Persian words the medial vowel ی is always long; but in Turkish and foreign words it is generally short, being introduced or omitted at the pleasure of the writer: as, کلوریز or کلورز, کتک or کتک, etc. A final radical vowel ی in an Arabic word is always short; as قاضی qāzī, vulg. qāzī, ثقی thāqī, etc.

From its position in the word حطی of the اجد formula, ی has the numeric value of 10 in chronograms and in mathematical tables.

The letter ی has several very important grammatical uses in Arabic. As a servile vowel between the second and third radicals of trilaterals, it forms adjectives or adjectival substantives; as, طویل ṭavīl; امیر omīr. As a final reduplicated servile it forms relative adjectives; as, عربی 'arabīyy, vulg. 'arabī, هندی hindīyy, vulg. hindī. As a final servile, short vowel with the value of ū it forms certain feminines, and is then sometimes written ā; as, نسوی or نسوا qūssā. Suffixed to a substantive as a short vowel, it is the Arabic possessive pronoun of the first person singular; as, ربی rabbī; and is often suppressed in this last, which is written رب, but still pronounced rabbī.

ی undergoes certain permutations with ā, ī, and ū, for which Arabic grammar must be studied.

As a servile final vowel suffixed to Persian substantives, ی forms relative adjectives, as, شبرازی shirāzī, شاهی shāhī. Suffixed to an adjective, it forms an abstract substantive; as, سفیدی safīdī, سفایت sīyānī. It also, as a servile consonant, takes the vowel of construction after a word ending in vowel ā or ū; as, دریای آمو doryāyi āmū.

In Turkish grammar, as a short vowel suffix, it is the possessive pronoun of the third person singular after words ending with a consonant, and becoming سی sī, sī, after words ending with a vowel; as, ااغلی oghūlū, بابایی bābāyī. It also forms the accusative case definite, and becomes یی yī, yī, after a vowel; as, قاضی قاضی qāzī qāzī. When, by rules of Arabic grammar, a hemze (◌) has to be written in the middle of a word over a dentation (◌) it is more commonly changed in Turkish writing into ā; as, باغ bāgh, for باغ bāgh. If the hemze be followed by a ی, it should never be changed; thus, رئیس rēyīs, should not be written ریس rōyīs.

When the letter ی is isolated, and when it ends a word, its dots are always omitted in Turkish.
